Afterword

Thanks for the wait, here's volume 8! Volume 1 was published in March 2008, which was about 5 years ago and the serialization started about 5 and a half years ago. In the beginning, I thought that it'll probably last about 2 years so I'm frankly shocked by this. Thanks for all the dear readers who have been supporting this work since the start!

Recently, I've started to be really appreciative of the bonds I've formed with those around me. There's that saying that one-in-a-lifetime encounters should be cherished as such, but I personally wish that these relationship can continue for as long as possible. I'll be sure to love my dear readers forever too!

Anyway, I thought I'll chat a little about alcoholic drinks this time.
When it comes to Fantasy series, the drink of choice has got to be ale!
As such, it's also a popular and common drink in Rotte's world. Among alcoholic drinks that are fermented from barley, that is, the beer we're deeply familiar with, ale is differentiated by having top-fermenting yeast in its production process.
In other words, the ale too is part of the beer family! If you gulp down ale as you would with lager, you might find the sensation rather unpleasant.
Thus, you should savour it by sipping as you would with black tea or coffee.
I'm sure you'll gain a new appreciation for the taste!
...though of course, this is strictly for adults only!

In Ygvarland, those from the age of 12 and above can drink as long as they are under adult supervision and can drink on their own when they hit 16. Basically, their drinking age is lower than that of our world.

I've still got a lot more I wish to chat about but I've run out of space, so let's meet again in volume 9. ♪

~ The alcoholics drinks of Ygvarland ~

Wine

Made from grapes. Ygvarland doesn't quite have the right climate to grow grapes, so wine isn't produced as much within the kingdom. Thus, it needs to be imported and is considered a luxury good.

Mead

Alcohol fermented with honey. Used to be a common drink but ever since the forest was cleared for development, the supply of honey decreased and mead became an expensive drink.

Ale

Fermented with barley and is a common drink in the land. There are ales that are made with hops, though the most popular is the type made with Juniper, aka Juniper ale.
